Maybe you want to know how to rent commercial property? Or maybe you're looking to buy a commercial property? When you know how to lease a building, it's easier to know what you want. The 3 Step Process

1. Set the stage. Creating a good first impression is essential in commercial real estate. Begin by finding the center point of your commercial space. This might be a specialized area of the building, a hallway, or the lobby. This is where you can show off your corporate identity. "The work you put into the lobby reflects the success of your company. It needs to make the right first impression," said Vanessa Sherbin, Associate Director at the American Corporate Realty Network. "The first impression is made when clients arrive in the lobby."
2. Get current. If you are a landlord, know what your property is worth. If you are a tenant, learn what you can bring to your space. This will help you decide whether or not to sign the lease. "Hiring a good landlord can increase the value of a property," said Michael Jones, a commercial real estate agent in Chicago. "I know a company with a dozen leases, all with different rent and different lengths. With a business consultant, my client increased the rent on all the leases."
3. But don't just negotiate. Once you've done your research, it's time to negotiate. Know your worth and what you're willing to pay. If you sign the lease and the final offer is lower than your expectations, you're probably being set up for failure. "If you're surprised, it means you didn't put enough thought into your negotiation strategy," Sherbin said. "You need to study the market and build a stronger case than your competition." Of course, you need to do the same thing with your potential
