InnerContent: ASMR and Light painting irl By: YouTuber Thumbzilla Thank you for watching! Hope you enjoyed this video. If so, please share it with your friends and subscribe to my channel. Peace out people! Jari is a voice artist and she has been a part of my channel since the very beginning. One of my first voice actors who got hired by me was her. She made sure that I got signed with the agency and got my start in the game industry, ever since she heard my voice, she was the one who gave me the advice that I needed to strive for a better career in the voice over industry. I want to say Thank you for everything Jari and I hope you will continue to be involved in the voice over industry? ## What's new in ASMR LIGHTness - Light Painting Soundtrack:

list. This is all the music I have collected so far and it's still growing But I will upload anymore soundtracks that I find I really hope you enjoy it and this is really not a big budget Because it's all old, cheap stuff I used to spend a lot of money and then also had no So I think I have uploaded everything I have already spent money on I will also put some stuff which is worth a few euros or something like that But it's good quality stuff When I have bought cheaper things, I've not bought a lot of it either If I can recommend something, it is as I said really worth it, then I suggest you to check it out Because it's worth their money Anyway, that's all for now See you later

The task of measuring injection flowrate in oil well programs has often been relegated to the drudgery of laboratory use. Most devices which have been built have been bulky in size, costly to manufacture and operation, and inaccurate in measurement. In the past, a standard test procedure used to evaluate injection flowrate or injection depth has consisted of 1) injecting a known volume of water to establish the flow into the reservoir, 2) injecting the same water by electric or gas circulation (i.e., the so-called water lift method) on or near the bottom of the reservoir, and 3) determining the depth to which the water has been lifted. There are various ways to carry out the water lift test. For example, a test can be done by determining when a chamber containing a mass of injected water, remains empty and assuming the rate of flow is zero. The date the chamber is empty can be computed from the time it takes water to move to the chamber. The depth to which the water rose can then be calculated from the time. This technique is cumbersome since it requires timing the injection of water into the chamber. If the injected water is a liquid of known specific gravity and viscosity, then the injection rate must also be known. Sensors have been used with electronic control loops which turned on and off the electric or gas circulation. Such sensors must be properly located with respect to the water level in the reservoir, and therefore are difficult to use in a wide variety of reservoir conditions. See e.g., Peterson, U.S. Pat. No. 3,651,910 and Wagner, et al, U.S. Pat. No. 4,089,303. This
