* A feature that is almost unheard of in Photoshop is warp stamping. Warp stamping is the ability to move a photograph, photograph you've created, or even a texture image, such as a pattern, into another layer (any layers, not just single layers). With warp stamping you can apply a subtle imperfection, such as a stone, to an image, which gives the illusion of a stone or marble background. Warp stamping enables you to move a "stamp" into a new layer and seamlessly place it on the background of a photograph. Warp stamping enables you to add various patterns and effects to a photograph.

Q: Enum returns always 'unknown' string in array in Python when trying to get correct output of enum I have created a enum like this: class status(object): empty=0 need=1 full=2 part=3 fullbut=4 needbut=5 def __str__(self): if self== self.empty: return 'full' elif self==self.full: return 'need' elif self==self.fullbut: return 'needbut' elif self==self.needbut: return 'need' And I call this enum with a function called print_answer that gives me the correct output based on the value of self but when I check what self is it says it's unknown... I have tried this with a variable that is not an enum and it gives me correct output. I can't understand what the issue is? A: Enums are not Objects. One of the columns is a boolean or whether the data is a song, company or whatever. I am currently working on reading this data and creating a search engine that takes the data and allows the user to search the data. My question is, is there a way to create a system or class that can identify the data type, so i can create the correct datatype for the column? A: First you'll need to parse the HTML page and extract all the elements that have a data-value. For each of those, look at the data-value attribute value.
