“Working with the human body in motion capture technology is a great experience in terms of producing iconic and highly detailed models,” said SimBe’s Head of Engine Development, Brandon Cook. “As we have been developing the most realistic sports simulation engine to date, HyperMotion Technology allowed us to have a more interactive, data-driven approach to get the player’s movements on screen.” “Working on a game like FIFA is a massive undertaking but it is an incredible way to get to know the team and what we are creating,” Cook explained. “HyperMotion Technology really helped to create an authentic match simulation, which provided us with a more realistic player model. It helped us to understand how a player moves, breathes, runs and tackles in game. We are really excited to share what we have created with gamers around the world.” Here’s how it works: A motion capture suit, which includes up to 32 motion sensors, is worn by an on-screen player. Data captured from the player’s game movements is transformed into digital form and added to the game engine. Based on the detected data, the engine provides the player’s real-life movements, interactions and player likeness. Below are some video examples of what players will experience after the patch on October 1. Here’s one from a practice session, featuring the newest look for real-world players. First-person view of the game engine in action, with in-game cutscenes showing how the training was recorded. The second video shows an in-game match, from a look at gameplay up close and from the broadcast angle. Finally, here’s a look at the new training session mode, including “Fifa 22 Cracked Accounts [Showcase Mode],” which is focused on how the new technology works in-game, an early look at the simulated match engine through the eyes of the commentators and a demonstration of first-person movement. FIFA 22 will release worldwide on October 1 on Xbox One, PlayStation 4, Windows PC and macOS. Head to the official FIFA website to learn more.

What's new:

- Team of the Year - In the Team of the Year mode, you select a time period that you want to play, such as a World Cup, a World League, or a single league season. The game then polls all of the data from the complete season, rankings and fixtures loaded into the Ultimate Team card, to create a team that represents the best winning performances in history. You get to manage the creation of your own team and create a squad of famous names, superstars and secrets from the most impressive duos and partnerships ever to play the beautiful game. You can even sign the marquee player from your club and let him decide his own card.
- 2016 UEFA Champions League - The Red Devils have lifted the UEFA Champions League title twice in recent seasons. Now the team is back with the biggest trophy in the European game
- UEFA Champions League Update - In August 2015, the UEFA announced the biggest change to the UEFA Champions League format since the competition launched. Now clubs play 38 weeks of matches to compete for the crown. Keep a keen eye on your fixtures each week and make sure you fix matters on time, as you want to perform well when the next round of elite fixtures begin. So set the calendar, secure the competition and embrace the challenges of seeing it all the way through to April.
- Double Fifties Plus - You can now find two FIFA Ultimate Team players in a 50/50 pack. There are more than 30 footballers who have already scored more than 50 international goals, and now you'll find them in packs so you can collect them with your friends.
- Power-ups - You'll now have lots of extra ways to attack and defend. Formerly known as Seismic Interception, this new move will see the ball's direction diverted when intercepted
- Passes - As always, all the passing moves are enhanced with more authentic, and exaggerated touches and hassles. Although both the FIFA and Pro Clubs are upped as an improvement from previous years.
- Ball Physics - The physics engine is bigger, better and clearer, bringing an all-new level of realism to the largest and most detailed pitch ever.
