MySQL database by going through the MySQL `MySqlDB::raw()`? I am not sure what would be a best practice. A: Beware that raw data from database is not safe. It is unsafe to send raw data to your frontend. In this case, it is not good idea to use `DB::raw` because you just drop your security. For me, it is more reasonable to use `with()` function to get raw data from model first, then extract data from the model into individual data. For example: `get(); // Or $data = SomeTable::all(); // Now extract data to any structure like $data = $data->toArray(); // or $data = $data->toArray(MyCustomResponse::class); // do anything you want with the data } }` [edit] Okay, let's think about why we use raw data in the model. But first, the answer is not "because it is easy to use in model". Why? Because raw data is security issue, and it is not reasonable to let users see the raw data. Think about it, you probably don't want your information to be shown like this: `{ "id": 3, "name": "name" }` It makes me uncomfortable to think about this
