More particularly, this invention relates to a process for producing a cellulose foam having high bulk density and uniform cell size and/or shape. Cellulose foams are widely used as packing materials, insulators, and heat insulators, and more recently, as a material for blown films. Because the processes for producing cellulose foams have hitherto been carried out batchwise, they have involved such problems as an inability to produce cellulose foams in high volume and in uniform cell size and/or shape. As a process for producing a cellulose foam, there is known a process described in Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 298,029/1988. This process comprises uniformly mixing a substantially anhydrous aqueous solution of carboxymethyl cellulose and a substantially water-free mineral oil, followed by extrusion through a die under pressure to obtain
